Friday afternoon:English Cultural Lectures, students can also share relevant online lecture resources of Peking University during the program.

\ PS: Class time is likely to vary with the continent you are staying. Live online courses allow multiple replays in 48 hours.*

C: CHINESE CLASSES

There are basic classes, elementary classes, intermediate classes and advanced classes. Before the start of the course, each learner needs to complete an online self-assessment questionnaire (containing 40 questions) of Chinese language proficiency. According to the results of the questionnaire, students are divided into classes of different levels (basic, elementary, intermediate and advanced). Each class will be limited to 15-20 students. In order to make full use of high-quality resources, classes with fewer than 8 students at the same level will be canceled and students need to choose other programs or courses.

Use exams to promote learning and improve listening, speaking, reading and writing skills.

Course content: In-depth analysis of the difficult points of the test; combination of lectures and exercises, combined with test question types, practice common vocabulary and grammar items; improve test taking strategies.

* Textbooks are compiled by the School of Chinese as a Second Language, Peking University

Attendance Requirement

* Enter the online classrooms as required, and avoid coming late, leaving early or being absent. Ask for leave when unable to attend classes for any reasons.

Being late or leave early for three times will be deemed as absent. One score will be deducted for one absence. If there is a doctor's leave, no point will be deducted. If there is no doctor's leave, it will be regarded as personal leave. If you are absent from personal leave, you will be deducted 0.5 points. In principle, students who are absent for more than one fourth of the total class hours of a course will not get the grade of the course in principle.

Exams and Grade Components

* The Overall Course Grade consists of three parts: scores of the course completion exam, scores of regular assignments and tests, and attendance rate; the second part accounts for 50% to 60% of the overall grade.

* Students will be offered an official transcript and a course completion certificate two weeks after course completion. One transcript for each student. The score is based on the hundred mark system, with the total class hours and the attendance of the students.
